12 Million Mark At Riverfront Stadium

Total paid attendance at Riverfront Stadium passed the 12 million mark during the initial homestand of the 1976 baseball season.

The Reds had drawn 11,927,225 during the first five and one-half years the stadium was open.

Cincinnati became only the fifth franchise in history to draw at least two million fans paid three consecutive years when the Reds set a club record last year.

The Stadium opened on June 30, 1970, but already in its short life the stadium has played host to nine World Series games, eight Championship Series games and an All-Star game.

Cincinnati set a new club record in paid attendance for a regular season game with a crowd of 53,390 on April 11 against Houston.

Stadium Attendance Figures Since 1970

Regular Season, 1970*	1,235,631
Regular Season, 1971	1,501,122

1975 World Series Was

By Si Burick
Sports Editor, Dayton Daily News

Man and boy, I have covered every World Series since 1934 for the Dayton Daily News. The last, that beautiful seven-game classic won by the Cincinnati Reds over the Boston Red Sox, made it 42 in succession. Since I was also in the press box for parts of the 1930 and 1931 Series, the total-games figure adds up to more than 250. That's well over half of the 426 contests since these interleague confrontations first came into being in 1903.

Which is why I had second thoughts when Bob Rathgeber of the Reds' publicity office, a former sports writer himself, invited this older fellow to prepare a Yearbook article about the greatest World Series of his own writing experience.

To begin with, there is positively no doubt about the 1975 World Series ranking with the greatest. Consider that it took seven games for the Reds to prove they were a mite superior to the Red Sox; that five of the seven were decided by one run; that the winning run was scored on the successful club's last time at bat four times; two games went extra innings.

Now I'm willing to concede immediately that Game Six, won by Boston, 7-6, in 12 innings, was THE BEST of the plus-250 I have covered.

When Carlton Fisk's leadoff homer in the 12th gave Boston its winning edge, the Fenway park clock read 12:24. A.M., that is. Fisk's blow, which hit the left field foul pole screen, brought 4 hours, 13 minutes of absolutely inspiring baseball to a close.

Adding to the drama, as midnight came and went, a full moon hung behind the right field stands. It was so real it looked unreal — like a painted moon on the backdrop of a theater stage.

For an afternoon working stiff, the night was just beginning. Most morning paper scribes were long past their normal deadlines. For us second-day, P.M. reporters, it meant walking down into the bowels of Fenway, first to listen to selected personnel from both sides in a general interview room; then, to trek to both clubhouses to discuss the game with the heroes of both sides. In this one, there were no goats.

When I finally returned to the working press facility on the roof, it was past 1:30. Facing my typewriter, I tried to fight off the perhaps juvenile notion of calling this "the greatest game I ever saw." I ripped up a dozen leads (opening paragraphs). Then I let it stand, saying it like this:

"... I'll go on the record, here and now. This was as good as any game I ever saw. Let's go all the way.

"It was THE GREATEST."

In the months that have passed, I have found no reason to back away from that opinion.

There were, of course, Cincinnati partisans who disagreed with this viewpoint. In truth, when I uttered the "best ever" opinion in the Reds' clubhouse, there was flak from coaches and some players.

"How could it be the greatest? We LOST."

Happily, Pete Rose, baseball's definitive hustler — a winning player who is also a consummate fan — agreed. Pete said it was the greatest game he ever played in, or saw. Which was some concession for a losing player. It also was the truth, the whole truth, nothing but the truth.

Dramatic? The Red Sox led, 3-0, after the first inning. The Reds came back to tie it up against Luis Tiant, the menacing titan who had tantalizingly subdued them twice before in the Series. By the eighth, the Reds led again, 6-3, but what this did was to create a situation that might be referred to as "Carbo's Revenge."

Bernie Carbo came to the big leagues originally with Cincinnati and was involved in a baseline collision with an umpire while trying to score from third in the opening game of the 1970 Reds-Baltimore Series.

The Reds traded Bernie to St. Louis and eventually he wound up with Boston in the American League. Now he came up in the eighth with two down and two on, and on a two-strikes count, blasted a Rawly Eastwick pitch into the center field seats to tie the score.

The happy pinch hitter's homer set up the overtime drama, climaxed by Fisk's leadoff smash in the 12th. Waiting at home plate to see if it would be fair or foul, Fisk was a sight to see, first leaping into space, then hardly touching ground as he swept majestically around the bases.

Great plays? Consider the last of the ninth. The Red Sox fill the bases. Will McEnaney replaces Rawly Eastwick to face young Fred Lynn, selected later as the first combination Rookie of the Year and Most Valuable Player in history.

Lynn hits a high fly near the left field stands. George Foster catches it on the line. Denny Doyle tags up. Foster fires a one-bouncer to Johnny Bench on the first base side of the plate. Bench swings around in that infielder-type motion that is his own catching specialty and tags Denny for the double play. Rico Petrocelli grounds out, and that crisis is over.

There were a dozen other eye-popper plays. One was unsuccessful as Lynn crashed into the center field fence but missed the ball for a Ken Griffey triple. The best belonged to Boston right fielder Dwight Evans, who took away a home run from Joe

THE BEST

Morgan with a man on in the 11th. This was a leaping one-hand catch of a ball that would have dropped into the right field seats for two runs. Instead, it was for two outs as Evans' throw to first doubled Griffey to end the inning.

To me, that catch matched some dramatic outfield saves I had seen in past Series. To recall a few: Brooklyn left fielder Al Gionfriddo's impossible catch of a 420-foot drive by Joe DiMaggio, in 1947; immortal Willie Mays' flight to the center field fence at the old Polo Grounds in New York for the Giants to haul in Cleveland's Vic Wertz's 460-foot bid; Mickey Mantle's remarkable running catch for the Yankees against Brooklyn's Gil Hodges, which saved Don Larsen's perfect game for the Yankees. Evans' catch was as good as any.

Among other memorable factors, Captain Hook, as Manager Sparky Anderson is sometimes known, used a record-tying eight Cincy pitchers. Boston's Darrell Johnson used four. The total of 12 also equalled a record.

There were no dull moments from Game 1 to Game 7. The last one, incidentally, was viewed by more than 70 million persons, according to official surveys, largest TV audience in sports history to that time.

In No. 7, the Reds had to make up an early three-run deficit. Their specialty, run-production in innings after two outs, worked as it had so often during the season. First, a two-run, two-down homer by Tony Perez; then a two-out, one-run single by Pete Rose; finally, a two-out, winning-run single by Joe Morgan for the game and the Reds' first world championship since 1940.

Mostly, it was a last-pitch series after Tiant scored a 6-0 shutout in the opener. Game 2 was a come-from-behind 3-2 victory for Cincinnati in the ninth. Game 3, won by the Reds, 6-5 in the 10th, was marked by the interference claim against pinch-bunter Ed Armbrister, which American League umpire Larry Barnett ruled in favor of the Reds. And that game included homers by Bench, David Concepcion and Cesar Geronimo plus a triple by Rose.

It took a great catch in center field by Fred Lynn off Ken Griffey in the ninth for Boston to win Game 4, 5-4.

Game 5 was an easy 6-2 victory for the Reds as Perez hit two homers to come out of an 0-for-15 slump. Could anyone imagine Perez stealing a base before registering his first hit? Tony stole one in Game 3.

What could possibly compare with this 1975 Series?

Well, there was that Series the Reds won in seven games against Detroit 35 years earlier. The 1940 team, managed by Deacon Bill McKechnie, also was noted for coming from behind and winning the close ones.

The clubs kept alternating victories. Detroit won the first, Cincinnati the second and so it went through six. Now the Deacon's men needed two in a row for the world championship.

It was Paul Derringer vs. Bobo Newsome in Game 7. Newsome had won two games and was assigned to this one with only one day's rest. He held a one-run lead going to the seventh, but then gave up consecutive doubles to Frank McCormick and Jimmy Ripple and a long sacrifice fly by shortstop Billy Myers that produced the winning run.

I also rate the 1934 St. Louis vs. Detroit series with the best ever. The Cardinals featured the immortal "Me'n Paul" brother pitching combination of Dizzy and Paul Dean. Dizzy won 30 games, Paul 19. And each won twice beating the Tigers in seven games. This was the Series when the late Joe Medwick was removed from the seventh game for self protection because of a shower of fruit, vegetables, papers — anything the aroused fans could throw. That barrage was precipitated when Medwick slid hard into Detroit third baseman Marv Owen.

I will always remember the 1946 Series between St. Louis and Boston. In the deciding seventh game, Boston scored twice in the eighth to tie the score at 3-3. That set up the greatest scoring dash I ever saw.

Enos (Country) Slaughter was on first. Until Pete Rose came

Joe Morgan (top) punches a single to center field with two outs in the top of the ninth inning in Game 7 to give the Reds a 4-3 victory and the World Series over the Boston Red Sox. Pete Rose (second from top) was the Series' Most Valuable Player and led all hitters in batting. Ken Griffey (second from bottom) scores the winning run in Game 7 on Morgan's single. Griffey also scored a run in the seventh inning that tied the game. Pitcher Will McEnaney (bottom) leaps into the arms of catcher Johnny Bench after Carl Yastrzemski's fly ball is caught by Cesar Geronimo. Rushing to join the action is third baseman Pete Rose.

There's no way to guarantee the outcome of a ballgame.

BUT YOU CAN GUARANTEE YOUR FINANCIAL FUTURE WITH LIFE INSURANCE.

Even in an uncertain economy, life insurance will deliver the money you need for your children's education . . . to pay off a mortgage . . . for retirement . . . to provide an income for your family even if you're not around . . . to protect your business . . . to pay estate taxes and other costs . . . or for whatever you decide.

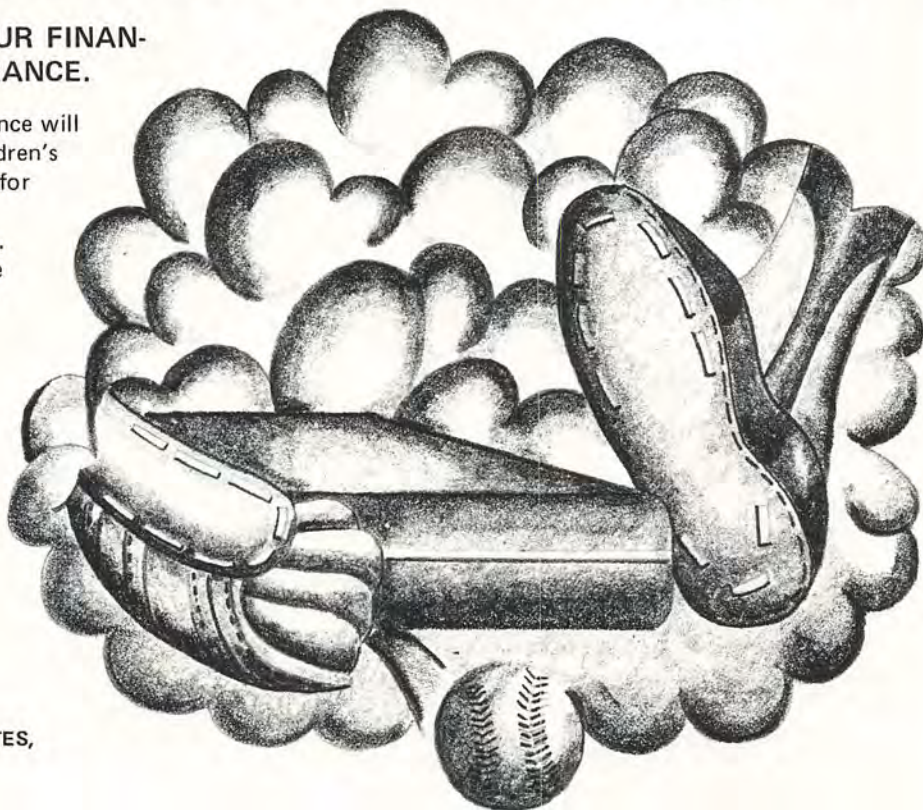

With life insurance there's no guessing the outcome. You'll be a winner. It's guaranteed.

1975 World Series Was THE BEST

along, Slaughter was baseball's most noted hustler; he would rather run than walk any time.

There were two down in the eighth when Harry Walker came to bat with Slaughter on first. Walker singled to left center as Slaughter took off as the pitcher unloaded his delivery. He raced from first to third and kept going. Shortstop Johnny Pesky took the relay with his back to the infield, never considering that Enos would try to score from first. So Johnny hesitated before turning around. And that momentary lapse was all the runner needed. His all-out slide beat the belated throw with what turned out to be the winning run of the 1946 World Series.

Game 4 is the one I'll always remember from the 1947 Series in which Brooklyn carried the Yankees to seven games before succumbing. Floyd Bevens, a rather undistinguished righthander with a 7-13 record, started against the Dodgers at Ebbets Field.

For eight-and-two-thirds innings, Floyd had the first no-hitter in World Series history in prospect, although he was unusually wild. His lack of control gave the Dodgers a run but they trailed, 2-1, in the ninth as Bevens issued his ninth pass and Al Gionfriddo, a pinch-runner, stole second. Here Yankee Manager Bucky Harris went against the book by ordering Pete Reiser intentionally walked to put the potential winning run on base. Up came Cookie Lavagetto to pinch-hit.

With one out to go, Cookie blasted Bevens' pitch off the right field wall for two bases. There went the no-hitter and there went the game. Two runs scored and there was bedlam in Brooklyn.

The first no-hitter was to come nine years later on October 8, 1956, at Yankee stadium. Again it was the Yankees vs. the Brooklyn Dodgers. This was in Game 5; the Series tied at two games apiece.

More than a no-hitter, it turned out to be a perfect game for Don Larsen, a righthanded pitcher using a lately-developed no-windup motion.

Twenty-seven Dodgers came up and none reached first base. Larsen's perfection included such pinpoint control that only one batter, Pee Wee Reese in the first inning, carried the count to three balls. Amazingly, there was but one spectacular play. Mickey Mantle caught Gil Hodges' bid for an extra-baser to left center with a backhanded stab.

Crowd tension was unbelievable as the perfect game moved into the ninth and Dale Mitchell came in to pinch hit with two down. Dale went down on strikes. And I don't mind confessing that I let out a shriek on the final strike, and so did most others in the press box. That was the first no-hit game in 309 Series contests.

The best of the 15 World Series before this year's was played in 1960 — Pittsburgh vs. the Yanks — which the Pirates won in seven. Strange? Well, the three games the Yanks won were by such humiliating scores as 16-3, 10-0, and 12-0.

But the Pirates, as Don Hoak, their third baseman and a former Red, would keep predicting to me after each setback, refused to die. The seventh game was wild, wild, wild. First, the Pirates put their fans at Forbes Field in a happy frenzy by leading, 4-0. By the sixth, the Yanks were ahead, 5-4, and it went to 7-4 in the eighth. Then, more delicious frenzy as the Bucs went back on top, 9-7, in the last of the eighth. More disappointment; the Yanks tied it in the ninth.

In the bottom of the ninth, Bill Mazeroski, the leadoff hitter, leaped on Ralph Terry's second pitch and drove it over the left field wall. His trip around the bases was much like Carlton Fisk's for Boston 15 years later. He, too, scarcely touched ground.

There were others worth remembering but those chronicled above will do. And now, this observer of some 250 games in 44 World Series might as well admit the truth.

The Reds over the Red Sox in 1975 was THE BEST.

In Own Way Joe Most Phenomenal Ever On Reds

By Ritter Collett
Sports Editor, Dayton Journal-Herald

Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig slugged their way into baseball's Hall of Fame.

Ty Cobb, George Sisler and Rogers Hornsby got there on a string of fat batting averages that bettered .400 in their outstanding years. Pie Traynor and Bobby Wallace acquired passage to Cooperstown by their dazzling glove play.

Lou Brock will probably arrive having "stolen" his way in due time. There are even whispers that one or two players "talked" their way into baseball's Valhalla.

When it comes time for the electorate to examine the credentials of Joseph Leonard Morgan, there will be matter to consider in all of the above categories including even "talking" — if that was a valid point.

In his four seasons with the Cincinnati Reds, the 155-pound Morgan has slugged 81 home runs, which indelibly stamps him the all-time home run king of the welterweights.

He has also scored 453 runs, stolen 246 bases, driven in 316 runs, averaged .300 in that category and fielded his second base position on Riverfront's carpeted surface with exceptional finesse and efficiency.

In his own way, Joe Morgan has to be the most phenomenal player the Reds have ever had.

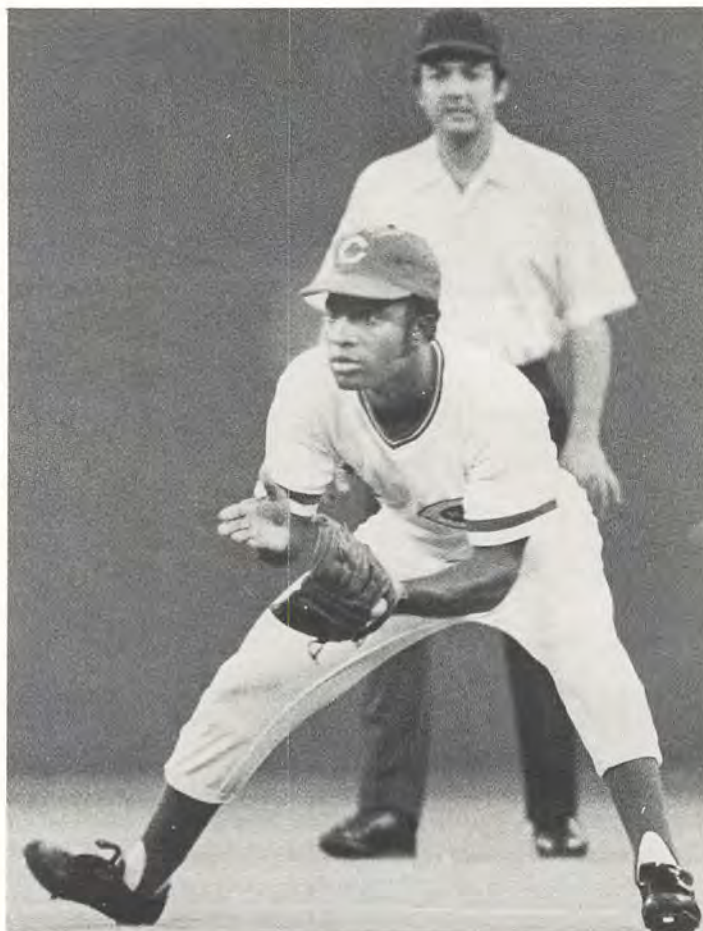

It strains the imagination to recall that before Reds' President Bob Howsam acquired him in a multi-player deal that was by far a bigger robbery than the Brink's caper, his playing talents were not fully recognized and his character was considered suspect.

Joe Morgan is now recognized as that remarkable sort of competitor who can just about set any specific goal and bear down to achieve it.

In the spring of 1975 when Cincinnati Manager Sparky Anderson decided to drop Joe into the third slot of the batting order, Morgan immediately allowed that he would have to think about driving in runs and set 100 as a reasonable goal.

He finished with 94, falling short probably only because he rested a painfully injured heel much of September and for a time fluctuated back to the No. 2 spot in the order.

"Personal goals are tricky things," Morgan insists. "My goals have always been team oriented. For instance, one year at Houston I batted only .256 but made my best overall offensive contribution to the Astros. And very few people ever noticed.

"I could have hit .300 several times if I had been content to slap the ball to left field and give up my natural inclination to pull the ball. One spring in Cincinnati I was doing that when Sparky came to me and said I wasn't helping the team by not being myself.

"As for stealing a base, why steal just for the sake of stealing? I'll steal when we need it," he says.

Morgan also runs on the bases now as a tactic to disrupt the opposition.

In the dramatic World Series last October, he was determined in the opening game to force Boston's Luis Tiant out of that curious rhythmic motion that is within a whisker of a series of balks.

Joe got his balk call, and while it didn't help the Reds in that particular game, it made the entire Red Sox pitching staff cognizant of what Joe could do to them.

"Joe Morgan makes things happen," says Alex Grammas, the former Reds third base coach now managing the Milwaukee Brewers. "He makes you play an aggressive game all by himself."

If you confine your attention to Morgan the player, you miss Morgan the man where he also stands tall.

When Joe came to the Reds, the team had two dominant white superstars in Johnny Bench and Pete Rose.

Without particularly deferring to them, Morgan slowly won their respect as a performer and a person and moved into their realm of tangible leadership — without ruffling any feelings.

The Cincinnati clubhouse, when it is relaxed and things are going right, is a veritable hotbed of insults and Morgan is in the middle of the exchange. But the boisterous repartee is good for teamwork and when things aren't going right, Morgan knows how to approach that situation too.

Last summer, in the midst of the pennant race, Morgan joined AIM (Adventures in Movement), the Dayton-based organization that teaches movement as an incentive for handicapped children — retarded, palsied, blind and deaf.

"Joe Morgan has plunged into supporting the things our teachers do in a way that is a delight," says Jo Geiger, the executive secretary of AIM. "He's not along for the ride or lending us his name. He's a warm, fine human being."

"Winning the MVP last year has been the climax of my career in a way," Morgan said recently. "But I like to think there are still achievement levels ahead of me."

"But I do look back on 1975 as the year Joe Morgan put everything together and made the most of what he has in ability," he said of his season, climaxed with the game-winning and Series-winning RBI against the Red Sox.

In Morgan's mind, enemy pitchers tend to dislike his habit of surprising them with a home run more than his constant threat to steal bases.

"Pitchers don't like to be taken downtown by a little man,"

Joe says. "I can see it in their eyes. But they respect me on the bases because they figure I'm doing my thing. And I never talk to 'em or try to rile them that way."

Manager Anderson says that Morgan is the strongest little man he's ever seen.

The ultimate tribute to Morgan is that he makes baseball look easy, not because he has all that natural ability. Rather he gets an absolute 100 per cent of both his physical and mental capabilities.

If he was a 190-pounder with the same competitive desire and productivity, he might own Cooperstown some day!

1976 PITCHER PERFORMANCE HANDBOOK

(Eleventh Annual Edition)

Used by major league pitchers to assess their own performances. Why? Here are comments from just a few.

"General managers, scouts, and the players themselves must recognize the HANDBOOK as the authoritative source of pitcher performance statistics. The book put me in touch with my own performance and the specific areas in which improvement is important."

—Jerry Koosman, New York Mets

"I've never been much of a reader but I've read the HANDBOOK over and over. I didn't realize there were so many stats that are a part of a pitcher's game. The book doesn't leave a stone unturned."

—Phil Niekro, Atlanta Braves

"The HANDBOOK is essential to the pitcher (or fan) who wants to evaluate performance."

—Pat Darcy, Cincinnati Reds

"Baseball-For-Fans has done what no other publisher has been able to do. They have set the record straight with a really probing analysis of pitcher performance."

—Jim Rooker, Pittsburgh Pirates

"The HANDBOOK is an ever-ready source of pitcher performance intelligence that has to be one of the most valuable and useful statistical references ever published."

—Jon Matlack, New York Mets

"For real inside baseball insight the HANDBOOK is 'the authority.' The inside facts add a new dimension to the understanding and enjoyment of a great sport."

—Al Hrabosky, St. Louis Cardinals

"The HANDBOOK is an eye opening, mind bending reference. Baseball-For-Fans informed enthusiasm provides, at long last, an inside look into major league pitching."

—Bill Lee, Boston Red Sox

"Thanks to the HANDBOOK a pitcher can know how effective his pitching really is. The in-depth features are the greatest."

—Ken Brett, New York Yankees

Each edition of the HANDBOOK delivers over 130 pages of vital information on current Major League pitchers . . . Computers are used to "scout" performance . . . The data are converted into informative, provocative features . . . Powerful reports define everything from the pitching "stoppers" on each club to baseball's "hard luck" pitchers . . . From hard hitting comparative performance ratings to analyses of actual pitcher accomplishments, covering over 25 categories of 1975 performance and over 20 categories of lifetime performance . . . The types of pitches thrown by each pitcher . . . Features on starting pitcher consistency and relief pitcher dependability. And many, many more features and facts YOU CAN'T FIND ANYWHERE ELSE.

Bob Bailey

Bob Bailey couldn't have been happier when he learned that he would play for the Cincinnati Reds in 1976. "When you're 33 years old and are traded to a world championship team, then your prayers are answered," Bailey said after the Reds acquired him from the Montreal Expos in exchange for Clay Kirby. "I'm thrilled I was traded to the Reds. It would've been impossible to pick a better team." Bailey doesn't figure to be a regular in the Reds' outfield, but he is being counted on for his strong righthanded bat in a utility and pinch-hitting role. "We went to the winter meetings looking for a righthanded hitter to strengthen our bench," Reds' President Bob Howsam said. "And Bob Bailey fits into that mold." A veteran of 13 full seasons in the major leagues — the last seven in Montreal — Bailey owns 177 lifetime home runs. His best year was 1970 when he slugged 28 and batted .287 also. He has hit 20 or more home runs three out of the last six years. With the Expos from their first season, Bailey is the career leader in virtually every one of the club's batting categories.

'Sparky Who' Showed Them

By Jim Schottelkotte
Sports Editor, Cincinnati Enquirer

One can still remember the cynicism and the doubts that day in October, 1969, when George Lee (Sparky) Anderson was introduced as the new manager of the Cincinnati Reds.

"Sparky Who?" they laughed. "Can you imagine," said another, "putting this guy in a town that has Bob Cousy and Paul Brown?"

Cousy, one of the great names of basketball, was then trying to rejuvenate the Cincinnati Royals of the National Basketball Association. Brown, who had practically invented modern pro football, was building a new National Football League power with the Cincinnati Bengals.

Sparky Anderson? He was a little-known coach with the San Diego Padres, one of the least regarded teams in baseball; something of a nobody in a short one-year playing career in the major leagues, and with only five years of managing experience in the lower minors. He was replacing Dave Bristol, who had been popular for the most part with the players, and he was taking on a team with its share of big-name stars, few of whom he knew really well and all of whom, presumably, were waiting to be shown.

Sparky Anderson showed them. In a six-year period in which Cousy and the Royals left Cincinnati a failure and in which Brown built skillfully but nevertheless could not win a major championship in football, Sparky Anderson and the Reds won four division titles, three National League championships and in 1975 finally grabbed the biggest prize of all, defeating the Boston Red Sox in a tumultuous, dramatic World Series and bringing Cincinnati its first world baseball championship in 35 years.

The statistics are even more impressive. In those six years, Anderson's Reds won 581 games, an average just short of 97 victories a season, and the Reds' winning percentage was .603. Only four other managers in major league history — Frank Chance, Billy Southworth, Al Lopez and Earl Weaver — did better in their first six seasons.

The beauty of Sparky Anderson is not that record but how unchanged he is from the man who walked into that room at the Netherland Hilton Hotel that day in 1969, wide-eyed, thrilled and somewhat stunned at his luck in being picked out of nowhere to manage the Reds. From the first, he proved to be a gracious, warm personality, good with the press, good with the fans and, exactly as Reds' general manager Bob Howsam had predicted, good with the players. His real strength as a manager, say those who observe him, is his sincerity, his honesty and his ability to communicate with his players.

Says Pete Rose, one of those veterans Sparky had to convince: "I think most of the players would walk through hell in a gasoline suit for him."

"I just think you can talk to him for five minutes and realize he's a sincere guy and down to earth," adds Rose. "He's an honest fellow. He's just a sincere guy."

Rose has played under four managers with the Reds and was invited to make some comparisons.

"Dave (Bristol) was friendly toward the players, too, and, in fairness to Dave, I don't think he's got the players Sparky's got. Dave was a good, hard worker, too. He'd do little things like kicking over food in the clubhouse when he got mad. Sparky wouldn't do things like that. Sparky forgets about it and gets ready for the next game. Sparky is different from Hutch (Fred Hutchinson). If you got in Hutch's doghouse, he wouldn't say anything. If Sparky gets mad, he'll come and tell you exactly what he thinks you did. If he gets mad, he gets it off his chest and is ready to go."

"He's really involved in the game," adds Rose. "I think he stays ahead of everybody. He's always open for suggestions. The people he's surrounded himself with are another strength. All four of his coaches could be capable managers."

One of those coaches, Alex Grammas, became manager of the Milwaukee Brewers following the 1975 season. Says Grammas:

"I think his big strength is his understanding of people in general and ball players in particular and his understanding of the human mind and what makes it tick," says Grammas. "That's something you can't reach out and grab. A lot of it has to be in you."

Anderson has always publicly stated managers don't really make that much difference, but Grammas disagrees.

"It's impossible to win without talent," says Grammas. "But if a team is capable of winning 50 games, I think Sparky will win 50. If it's capable of 100, I think he'll win 100."

"He's grown in the job," says Bob Howsam, assessing his manager. "He's as enthusiastic or more so than when I first knew him. He lives and loves baseball, and he's a refreshing type of person in the game because he's so direct in his approach."

Perhaps the reason that Anderson has proved a good manager is that things never came easy for him as a player. It is the fellows who have to dig and scrape out a living as a player who often make the best managers. Bob Howsam agrees.

"I'm firmly convinced of that because I had Ralph Houk for me and Chuck Tanner, Earl Weaver and Darrell Johnson as well. They were all players who were not outstanding stars. They did it by fighting and clawing their way to the top. They decided in their own minds to learn the game of baseball and qualify themselves to lead."

Certainly that was in Howsam's mind when he settled on George Anderson to lead the Reds. There was another compelling reason why he leaned to Anderson.

"I feel managing in the minors is important. It's not a must but a very important plus. You learn about young players as a whole and you have to do so many more jobs."

What Howsam knew and what the record didn't show was that Anderson had a particular record of success taking young teams, shaping them and firing them with the will to excel.

"The things that impressed me were his own enthusiasm, his knowledge of the game and his ability to take a young club and even though it might not be such a good club to begin with because of its youth, in the second half of the season he'd always be up near the top or win with it," recalls Howsam.

And, so, October, 1969, Sparky Anderson met the press and the doubters. What did the man himself feel?

"I was so naive and enthusiastic I never looked at what the consequences might be," he says. "I never even thought of what it might be failing. I just thought it was a tremendous opportunity. If I had to start over and knowing what I know now, I'm sure it would be a different feeling. I was just so lucky the way things came off."

"If 1970 (when the Reds won a pennant and got into the World Series against Baltimore) had been 1971 (when the club fell to fourth and won only 79 games), it would have been a nightmare," adds Anderson. "I appreciate that 1970 went so smoothly."

No manager lives without detractors, and those who question Anderson say he simply has more talent than others.

But this is forgetting a masterful job through the years, particularly in 1975, with a pitching staff that has never been completely sound. So often, in fact, did Anderson juggle pitchers in 1975 that he got a new name — Captain Hook.

The name does not appear to bother him because he felt he was consistent with himself and with his players — and he regards that as important.

If he has a strength, he thinks, it is that he always tries to be himself. "I'm kind of a character in that I like to joke with people. I really like people. I don't like to be alone. I think my naturalness with the players has come off. I know they think they can talk with me because I don't make a big to-do about things."

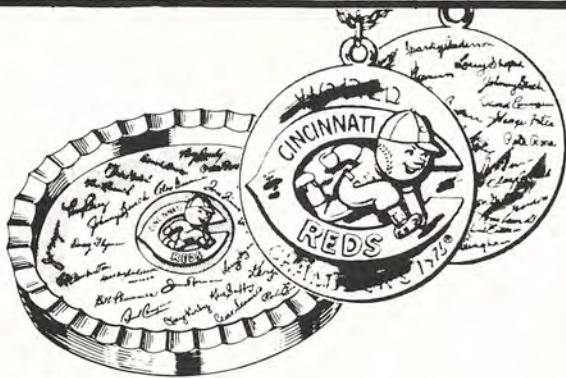

"I don't really have any philosophy. If I have one, I guess it's be yourself. If you're somebody that yells and screams, scream and yell. That's you. Don't try to be something you're not."

There are other things Sparky Anderson believes in that don't get publicity.

"Every home stand, he's always going up to Children's Hospital to see the kids," reveals Rose. "He doesn't do it for publicity."

"He just gives you the impression if you get in trouble at home, he'll help you or listen to you. Most people are afraid to talk to their superiors in that respect."

Most Unusual Visit By Reds' Manager

The service station attendant may never be the same again. There he was, working away at his station in the Boston suburb of Medford when, all of a sudden, a bus pulled in and the World Series had come to him.

It may not have been the first time a bus had been in his station, but what happened next definitely had to be a first for the man. The door of the bus popped open and the unmistakable face of Sparky Anderson, in full Cincinnati uniform, was moving toward the station, while the players laughed and shouted advice — and other things — to their manager.

This was on Sunday, Oct. 19 and the sixth game of the World Series had just been rained out for the second day in a row. Fretting over the inactivity, Anderson had arranged for the team to work out indoors at Tufts University in suburban Boston.

The bus driver found Medford all right, but he had no idea where Tufts was located. So what do you do when you're lost? You stop at a gas station and ask directions — whether you're one man in a car or a bus filled with the National League champion Cincinnati Reds.

Winning Is Fun And Rose Wants More

By Pat Harmon
Sports Editor, Cincinnati Post

Pete Rose says playing and winning is fun. And 1975, he said at the end of the season, "was the funnest year. We won 115 games, counting the regular season, the playoff, and the World Series."

He'd like more of the same in 1976. "I've got three silver bats at home." Silver bats are for individual batting championships. "But I'd rather have diamond rings, one for every finger." Diamond rings are for teams who win world championships. When Pete and company won the world championship in 1975, it was the first for Cincinnati since 1940.

Pete played an unforgettable part in the Reds' winning the Series against the Boston Red Sox. Many writers have called it the most thrilling series they ever saw, as the Reds won in the last inning of the seventh game. There was pressure all through the Series, and the harder it got, the better Rose played. He was on base 12 of his last 16 times at bat. He led all the batters with a .370 average. In the seventh game he dumped Denny Doyle, breaking up a double play and opening a way for the Reds to get back into a game which they had been losing.

For this, Sport Magazine voted Rose the outstanding player in the World Series, and a wave of other awards started coming his way. Sports Illustrated named him its Sportsman of the Year, over Jack Nicklaus and O. J. Simpson, the runnersup. And the nation's sports writers voted him the Hickok Award as the outstanding pro athlete of the year. This time Muhammad Ali and Nicklaus were runnersup.

Rose beat some pretty fair company to win those prizes, and he's been beating pretty fair company ever since he came into the major leagues in 1963. But 1975 was the greatest, because he starred in the biggest showcase of them all, a World Series that drew an all-time record TV audience for a sports event.

"If they're gonna sell the game to the kids, they better show 'em this one," said Pete. "It was a frog strangler. I had the seventh game taped on my TV set back home, and I couldn't wait to get back from Boston so I could watch it again."

It was in the sixth game that Rose, at bat in the 11th inning, turned to the Red Sox catcher, Carlton Fisk, and said, "Don't you think this is the best game you've ever seen?" The Red Sox won that game in the 12th, but Cincinnati beat them the next night, causing Rose to exult, "We're world champs, but just by inches."

Each year Rose sets up his goals — to bat .300, make 200 hits, have a good year in the field, and see the team win a pennant and World Series. Last year was the first time all his goals came at once, but he's had many exceptional seasons.

He's won two Gold Gloves as the outstanding fielder at his position, three batting titles and a Most Valuable Player award. He's been rookie of the year, sophomore of the year and an all-star in both the infield and outfield.

And he's 35 years old with 13 big-league seasons behind him. He once said his ambition was to hold every record on the Reds. Already he's the all-time leader in games, runs, hits, doubles and total bases. He's second in extra-base hits and needs just 32 to tie the leader, Frank Robinson. He is fourth in triples, seventh in runs batted in, ninth in homers.

He is second among all National League active players in hits, just four behind Lou Brock. He wants to make 3000 hits for his lifetime and should get there when he's about 38. He needs 453. He has had seven 200 hit seasons and the record is nine, held by Ty Cobb, to whom Rose is often compared.

Rose, like Cobb, comes to win. This was why he accepted Sparky Anderson's request to move from left field to third base in May, 1975. "I knew it would give us a set lineup because George Foster could play steady in left field, and we needed a set lineup," Pete said.

The club had been floundering below .500 most of the time before the switch. With Rose on third, the Reds went on to win 41 of 50 games in one stretch. They won the division by 20 games, the first time this had happened in baseball since 1906.

Pete Rose personifies Cincinnati. He's a home-town boy who stayed a home-town boy. He makes the town glow. He runs off to the big city to accept those rich rewards, like the Hickok diamond-studded belt valued at $30,000, but he always comes home, ready to do a better job for Cincinnati.

It's hard to imagine anyone who could do a better job than Pete Rose in 1975. But he'll be trying. Hustle isn't just an old-fashioned virtue; it's in all the time. Pete Rose has proved that.

Watch Pete Move Toward 3,000 Hits

Pete Rose got off to the finest start of his major league career in 1976 and that quick burst out of the starting gate pushed him into first place in total career hits by active National Leaguers.

Rose started the season with 2,547 hits, four less than Lou Brock. But by the end of the first week of play Rose overtook the St. Louis leftfielder and continues on his way toward the coveted 3,000-hit mark.

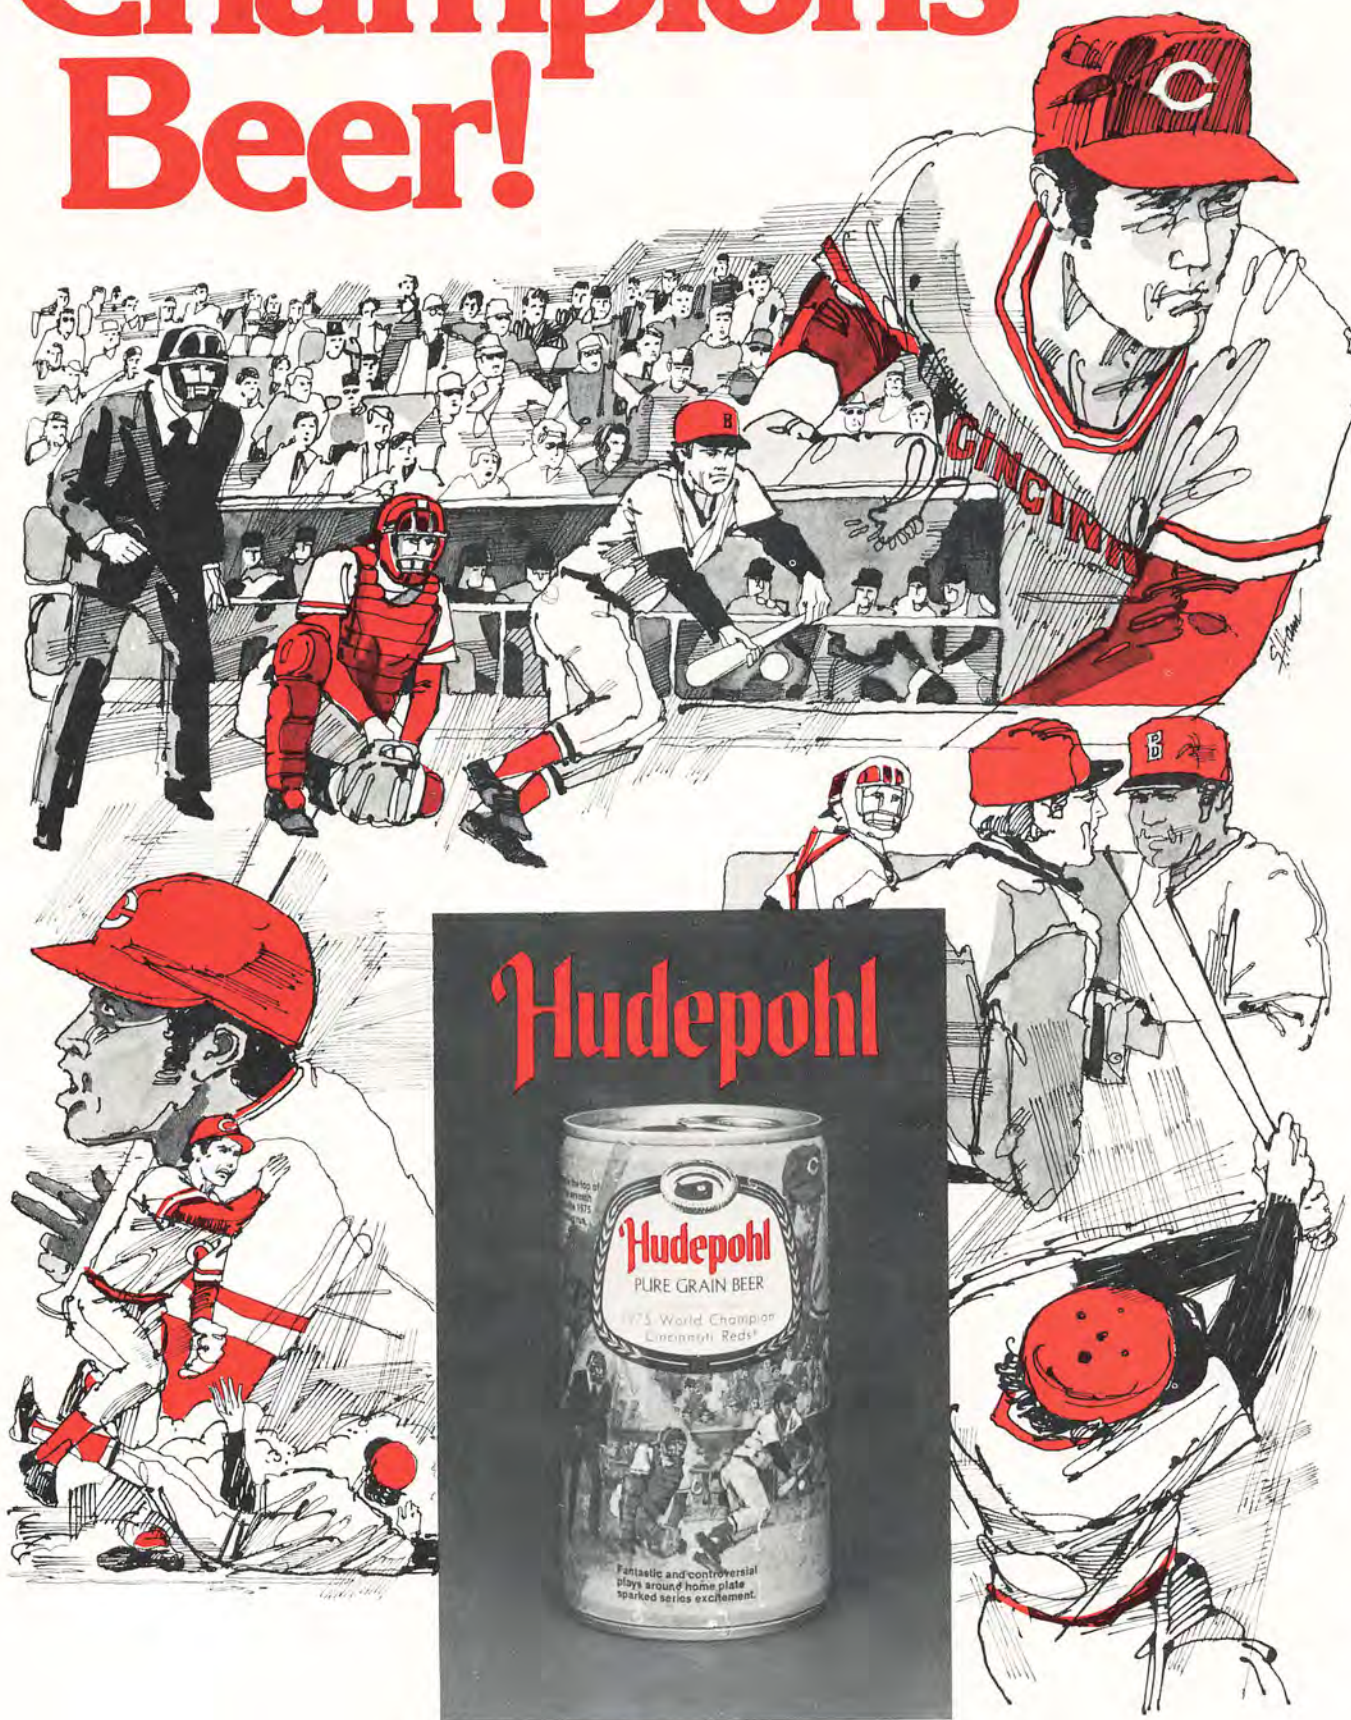

There are currently 12 members of the select club and if Pete makes it, it's quite possible he'll be one of the last major leaguers to amass 3,000 career hits.

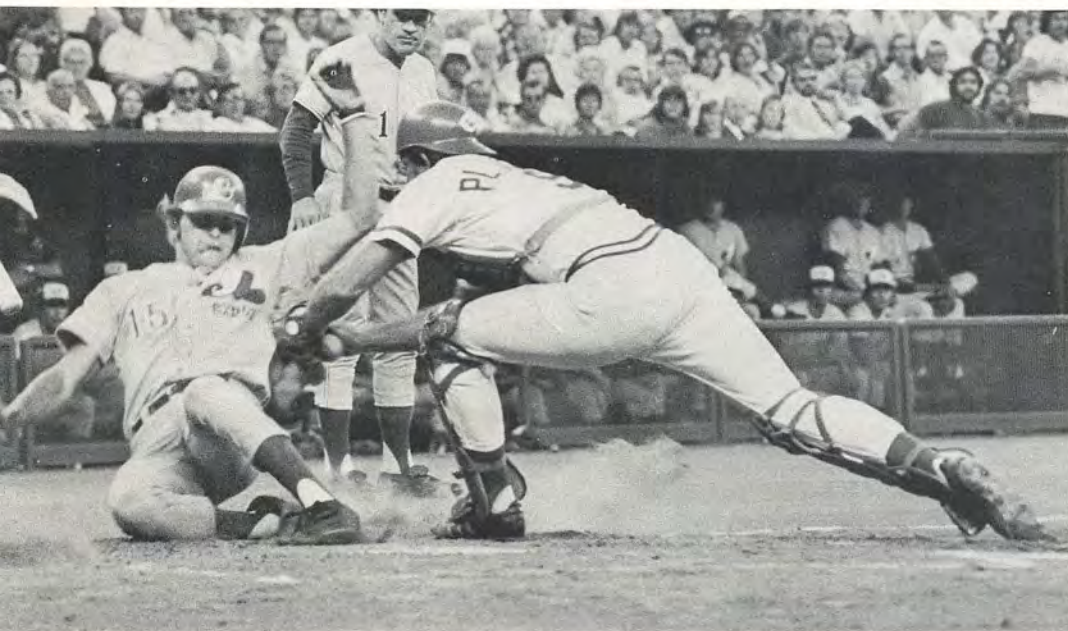

Frank Robinson, Cleveland's playing manager, started the season needing only 72 hits to make 3,000, but last year he had only 28.

Brooks Robinson, Billy Williams and Brock are within striking range while Vada Pinson, who had 2,787 hits, retired after spring training. The No. 1 active hit leader is Hank Aaron who stands second on the all-time list with Champions' Beer!

Bill Plummer

Catcher Bill Plummer came through in the clutch in 1975 for the Reds. The Cincinnati backstop had four game-winning hits in his contribution to the record 108-victory season. He jumped on Atlanta for three of the game-winners and also had a winning hit against Pittsburgh on Aug. 17. Bill's 19 RBIs were a high water mark for him in his major league career. A fine defensive backstop, Plummer has been in the Cincinnati organization since coming from the Chicago Cubs in 1969 and has been with the Reds since 1972.

Joel Youngblood

One of the Reds' best hitting prospects is Joel Youngblood, a righthanded hitting outfielder. A No. 2 draft choice in June, 1970, Youngblood prepped the last three years at Indianapolis. He batted .263 last year, but in two previous years with Indy Joel hit .317 and .285. Youngblood has good speed, too. He has stolen at least 13 bases in each of the past five seasons, including 18 last year. "Joel has a quick bat," said Reds' Director of Player Personnel Chief Bender. "He's what we consider a good bat prospect."

Reds' Power

Johnny Bench and Tony Perez, baseball's foremost one-two run producing combination the past eight years, have moved into the top 10 on the all-time list of RBIs by two players on the same team during an eight-year period.

The Reds' catcher and first baseman have knocked in almost 1,700 runs the past eight seasons to join a group of baseball immortals such as Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Hank Greenberg, Mel Ott and others.

The Reds' duo's total is 1,684 and is good for seventh place.

Bench, who has won three RBI championships and knocked in more than 100 runs in five of the eight seasons, has driven in 849 runs while Perez has knocked in 835 during the same stretch.

Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig, No. 1 on the all-time list, lead the way with 2,498 RBIs during an eight-year stretch from 1927-34.

Johnny Bench

For the second time in four years Johnny Bench is returning after off-season surgery. In December of 1972 the Reds' catcher underwent surgery for a benign lesion on the lung. And this past November he went under the knife once more, this time for shoulder surgery. Bench battled the sore left shoulder all season long after being involved in a collision at home plate with San Francisco's Gary Matthews on April 22. The surgery removed cartilage from the top of the shoulder. But despite the season-long problem that got worse as the campaign progressed, Bench still posted his best batting average since 1970, finishing at .283. He hit at least 25 home runs (28) for the seventh consecutive season and knocked in more than 100 runs for the fifth time and four years in a row (110). If it hadn't been for late-season problems, Bench might have won his fourth RBI crown. Finishing second by 10 to Philadelphia's Greg Luzinski, Bench and the Phils' leftfielder battled on even terms into early September. But then Bench was idled for 10 days and Luzinski went on to win the crown. Bench remained one of baseball's most popular individuals both on and off the field. He had 2.9 million All-Star votes, the third straight year he was the leading vote getter. Commented Dayton Journal Herald Sports Editor Ritter Collett: "No baseball player has come close to matching Bench's off-field popularity since Babe Ruth's heyday." He won his eighth straight Gold Glove. No other catcher ever won more than three. That prompted Cincinnati Post baseball writer Earl Lawson to write: "No one is quicker in fielding taps in front of the plate and Bench's arm ranks No. 1 in accuracy and strength. And no catcher makes the one-handed tag play better than Bench." A winner of many awards in previous years, including a pair of MVP's, Bench was the 1975 winner of the Lou Gehrig Award. It is presented annually by Phi Delta Theta to the player who best exemplifies the ability and character of Gehrig. Now a veteran of eight full seasons with the Reds, he is moving up in many career offensive categories. He tied Vada Pinson's club record for most career grand slams (6) by hitting two within a space of three weeks in May. He hit one May 7 off San Diego's Alan Foster. The other provided the Reds a 5-4 victory over Montreal and Steve Renko on May 26. When Bench led the National League in total bases in 1974, he was the first catcher ever to lead in that category.

Duo Rank 7th All-Time

Bench and Perez have moved into some rather select company with their combined RBI records. Of the 12 players on the list ahead of them, only Gil Hodges, Duke Snider, Eddie Mathews and Hank Aaron are not in the Hall of Fame. Aaron is a sure bet to make it five years after he retires and Hodges and Mathews will most likely reach Cooperstown eventually.

And individually, both are moving up in the all-time record list.

Perez, especially, is making his presence felt.

Last year Tony became the all-time Cincinnati run producer when he broke Frank Robinson's record. Perez enters the 1976 season with 1,024 RBIs, good for 85th on the all-time list. When Tony knocks in his first three runs in '76, he will move past Reds Coach Ted Kluszewski into 84th place.

During the past nine seasons Perez is the only player to knock in 90 or more runs in each of them. Six of the nine saw him drive in at least 100, including 1975 when he plated 109.

Bench won National League RBI titles in 1970 with 148, 1972 with 125 and 1974 with 129. He was challenging for his fourth crown last season, but fell victim to a couple of injuries late in the season that prevented him from challenging champion Greg Luzinski. Nevertheless, Bench was second, just 10 behind Luzinski.

If Bench would win the RBI crown in 1976, he would become the youngest four-time RBI champion in National League history. Rogers Hornsby was 29 when he won his fourth title. Hank Aaron was 33 when he captured No. 4. Bench would be 28 if he won. Ruth and Gehrig were both 28 when they won their fourth RBI championships in the American League.

Following is a list of top 10 RBI combinations during best eight years together:

1. Ruth-Gehrig, 1927-342498
2. Hodges-Snider, 1949-571949
3. Aaron-Mathews, 1955-631922
4. Greenberg-Gehrig, 1933-401829
5. Ott-Terry, 1928-351781
6. Berra-Mantle, 1952-591718
7. Bench-Perez, 1968-751684
8. Musial-Slaughter, 1946-531672
9. Mays-Cepeda, 1958-651645
10. Heilmann-Cobb, 1919-261641

Tony Perez

Tony Perez is Mr. RBI in the major leagues among the current generation of players. The Reds' first baseman has become one of the game's true superstars because of his ability to get the run across home plate. As an example, Perez is the only player in the major leagues the past nine seasons to drive in 90 or more runs in each of them. His nine-year average is 104 plus per season and in six of the nine campaigns Tony has passed the century mark. In 1975 he passed an important milestone in Cincinnati history. He became the all-time Reds' run producer, moving ahead of Frank Robinson into the top spot. The big event took place at Riverfront on Sept. 2 when he smashed a run-scoring single off San Diego's Jerry Johnson giving him 1,010 RBIs. He finished the season with 14 more and a career total of 1,024 good for 85th on the all-time list of RBI leaders. Another 100-plus season would put Tony into some rather select company and interestingly enough when he gets No. 3 in 1976 he will move past Reds' Coach Ted Kluszewski into 84th place. "Tony Perez is like a mechanical doll," Manager Sparky Anderson said. "You wind him up in the spring, turn him loose and wait for his 100 RBI." While Perez has averaged more than 100 RBI per season the last nine years, he has yet to win a league title. "I would like to lead the league," Tony acknowledged. "But I know Johnny Bench will lead it if anyone does on our club. He don't leave too many for me to drive in." Indeed, Perez has knocked in 621 the past six years, but in the same span Bench has driven in 677. Tony, who is second on the Reds all-time home run list with 258 entering 1976, hit some big roundtrippers in 1975. One came off Steve Carlton at Riverfront on July 7. That home run carried into the red seats, making Tony the first player ever to land two home runs into the top level in Cincinnati. He also hit one Championship Series homer and three more in the World Series. His playoff shot got the Reds going in Game 2. He hit a pair in Game 5 of the World Series, breaking an 0-for-15 slump, and then No. 3 came off Bill Lee in Game 7, a big two-run shot in the sixth inning.

Ed Armbrister

He might have been the "forgotten man" back in November of 1971, but by November of 1975 anyone who saw the 1975 World Series will not soon forget Ed Armbrister. A utility outfielder playing in his first full season in the major leagues, Armbrister's name jumped into the headlines as a result of a play in the 10th inning of the third game of the World Series. A collision between Ed and Boston catcher Carlton Fisk caused a wild rhu-barb and the Reds went on to score a 6-5 victory. Here's what happened: Armbrister was batting for pitcher Rawly Eastwick. He put down a sacrifice bunt in front of the plate. As he headed for first base, Fisk, who was chasing after the bunt, collided with Armbrister. Fisk went ahead and threw to second, but the ball wound up in center field. The Reds had runners on second and third and the Red Sox were protesting interference. But home-plate umpire Larry Barnett ruled otherwise and Armbrister's bunt will long be remembered as one of the most controversial plays in World Series history. Armbrister was also in the spotlight in the Championship Series against Pittsburgh, too, but in a different manner. Called to bat for Eastwick in the 10th inning of Game 3 in that Series, also, Armbrister lofted a sacrifice fly to center field, knocking in the deciding run as the Reds swept the Pirates. One of only three Bahamas natives to play major league baseball, Armbrister came to the Reds in November of 1971 in the big eight-player swap with Houston that also found Joe Morgan, Jack Billingham, Cesar Geronimo and Denis Menke putting on Cincinnati uniforms. Reds' President Bob Howsam recalls the deal that brought Armbrister to the Reds. "We were given a list of players to select from to balance our trade," Howsam noted. "We only liked two players on that list and Armbrister was one of them. I had seen him play in the Florida State League and he had impressed me."

George Foster

C-O-N-F-I-D-E-N-C-E. Those 10 letters form what is probably the most important word in the vocabulary of George Foster. "I go to the plate now confidently," said the Reds' leftfielder. "I believe that I will be a strong hitter for a long while now." It was the new-found self assurance that helped the 27-year-old Foster to rank among the batting and home run leaders in the National League last season. He batted an even .300, blasted 23 home runs and knocked in 78 runs. He became an important part of Cincinnati's lineup that featured four consecutive bonafide home run threats. But he's not setting goals. "I want to maintain my health and strength and go out and do my best each and every day. I'm not really aiming for any particular totals, like homers or RBIs. I'd just like to keep hitting and eventually reach my full potential." Strength is one of Foster's fortes. When he hits a home run it's generally a "no doubter." One blast last year that he hit off Houston's Larry Dierker stands out. The Reds were down 3-1 in the sixth on July 2. There were two outs when Foster hit a hanging slider. It was estimated by some to have travelled some 480 feet as it landed high in the gold seats on the third level of Riverfront. "His home runs leap off his black hickory bat as if they were propelled by rocket fuel," wrote Dayton Daily News baseball writer Hal McCoy. But Foster doesn't consider himself one of baseball's strongmen. "I'm not that strong," George insisted. "Quickness and bat speed enable me to hit long home runs. I do a lot of isometrics for my forearms and that has really helped me." Foster, who came to the Reds in June of 1971 in a trade with the San Francisco Giants, moved into the lineup as a regular on May 3 when Pete Rose was switched to third base. Enroute to his first .300 season in the majors, Foster hit some singles and doubles, too. He had a 16-game hitting streak between July 31 and Aug. 22, the longest on the club in 1975. And in another stretch he hit safely in 32 out of 40 games.

OUTFIELD

Ken Griffey

S-P-E-E-D. That's what makes Ken Griffey one of the most exciting and successful young players in the major leagues today. "He's just a blur when he goes past first base," said Reds' Coach George Scherger. Pitcher Will McEnaney described Griffey's speed in another fashion. Said McEnaney: "He's so fast when he runs his feet aren't on the ground long enough to make any noise." And it was speed that enabled the Donora, Pa., native to hit .305. He had 38 infield hits, seven of which were bunts. "He's got to learn the feel of what it is to be good, then look out," said Reds' Manager Sparky Anderson. "With his legs and if he keeps his head — which I think he will — and he catches a lot of breaks, someday he will have an unbelievable year." Griffey started the season with a bang, hitting .333 in April. He was still hitting .320 on the last day of July, but a dry spell found the average had slipped to .293 on Aug. 3. Then came a surge that insured Griffey a .300 season. In his next 25 games he collected 40 hits and batted .381 to hike his mark back to .315. Ken is just beginning to learn his way around on the base paths. He swiped 16 bases during the regular season, but stole three in Game 2 of the Championship Series to help the Reds set a stolen base record. "I'm not a scientific stealer yet," Griffey explained. "Morgan's scientific. He reads the pitchers. I don't, but I run faster. If I ever learn what he knows, I'll steal a lot." Ken was in on much of the Cincinnati success in 1975 and in both the clinching games of the Championship and World Series he scored the deciding runs. In fact, in Game 7 of the World Series he crossed home plate with the tying run in the seventh inning and the winner in the ninth.

Pat Darcy

Pat Darcy starts the 1976 baseball season working on a nine-game regular season winning streak. His record stood at only 2-5 on June 29, but from that point on the 25-year-old righthander was nearly invincible as he reeled off nine consecutive victories, the most by a Reds' rookie pitcher since Wayne Simpson's 10 in a row in 1970. Among those nine straight wins was a complete game on July 30, a most important one for the Reds. Not only was it Darcy's first in the major leagues, but it snapped a string of 45 consecutive Cincinnati games without a route-going performance. That was one of the many records the Reds set in 1975. Darcy's complete game that snapped the streak was an eight-hitter over the Giants, 6-1. A native of nearby Troy, Ohio, Darcy has virtually come out of obscurity to his spot with the Reds. Acquired from Houston in a deal that sent Denis Menke back to the Astros, Darcy came to the Reds during spring training of 1974. He went on to post 12 wins at Indianapolis, to get a look in the final month of the season with Cincinnati and then make the staff last spring with a string of outstanding performances. Darcy, who is an advocate of yoga exercises, occasionally will be seen loosening up in the outfield before a game. He is dedicated to being successful. Wrote Hal McCoy, baseball writer with the Dayton Daily News, "His head is on straight. In an era of the athletic anti-hero, Darcy believes in the 'baseball, hot dogs, apple pie and Chevrolet' theory."

Don Gullett

At the ripe old age of 25, Don Gullett is the No. 1 active pitcher in baseball. To a point, anyway. The Reds' lefthander has the highest overall career winning percentage of any hurler going with 100 or more decisions. Don's marvelous record through his first six years in the major leagues is 39 games over .500 at 80-41. That figures out to a winning mark of .661. His 1975 record improved on that standing. He won 15 and lost only four. His percentage of .789 was the best in the league, the second time he has posted the top mark. "I feel like a music teacher watching a great pianist at work when Gullett is out there," Reds' Pitching Coach Larry Shepard acknowledged. "Don is so good, he gives me chills," Manager Sparky Anderson added. Gullett missed his chance for his first 20-victory season when he suffered a broken left thumb in mid-June. That cost him two months. He was working against Atlanta at Riverfront Stadium with two outs in the ninth inning on June 16. Larvell Blanks slashed a shot back through the middle. The ball struck Gullett on his pitching hand and a fracture of his thumb resulted. He went to the disabled list and didn't return until Aug. 18. "The only reason Don got hit on the thumb is because he's so quick," Anderson said. "Heck, most pitchers would have been hit in the leg or the back. But Don is so quick, his first reaction was to try and stop the ball." Later, Anderson analyzed Gullett's first two months when he ran up a 9-3 record with seven complete games and a 2.09 earned run average. "He was pitching the best baseball I've ever seen him pitch," Anderson noted. "He looked like a cinch 20-game winner." When Gullett did return on Aug. 18 against St. Louis, he came back in blazing fashion. He was limited to 70 pitches by Anderson, and all Gullett did was throw five shutout innings, giving the Cardinals just three hits. He went on to win three more in a row, giving him a nine-game winning streak between May 26 and Sept. 7. The streak was stopped by the Giants on Sept. 13, but Don came back to pitch Cincinnati's 103rd season victory Sept. 21, a win that set a club record for victories in a season. He added another victory in the Championship Series and won Game 5 of the World Series. He hit his first professional home run in the playoffs, homering against Larry Demery with a man on base. "Don Gullett is the epitome of the All-American boy," Dayton Daily News Sports Editor Si Burick wrote: "He is only 25, yet has completed six full years as a major league pitcher." Gullett is held in high esteem by fellow players and Anderson, too. "We all look upon Don as an extraordinary individual," Catcher Johnny Bench said. "I just strive to be a better person, a humble type person," Gullett said. "He is the greatest individual I ever met," Anderson said. "Despite his success he has never changed for one minute of his life."

Gary Nolan

As incredible as it sounds, Gary Nolan was the workhorse of the Cincinnati Reds pitching staff in 1975. That's right. After missing virtually two and one-half seasons, the 28-year-old right-hander came back to lead the World Champions in innings pitched and tie for the most victories. Gary defied the odds and made believers out of everyone. Always one of the best control pitchers in baseball, Nolan was amazing in 1975. He led the entire league in fewest walks per innings pitched. He pitched 211 innings, won 15 games and walked only 29 batters in what rates as one of the best comebacks ever by a pitcher who faced the knife. That surgery came about on May 13, 1974 and an inch-long calcium spur was removed from his right shoulder. The shoulder had been a source of trouble since 1968, but it wasn't until the second half of 1972 that Gary found he could hardly pitch. He pitched only 10 innings during the entire 1973 season and worked in two games late in 1974 after recovering from the operation. "I started throwing a month after the operation. I worked in two games for Indianapolis and I threw a little in Florida in the Instructional League. I knew then that everything was okay." Nolan may have been the only one, though. "When I left home for spring training, I must confess that I couldn't conceive Gary coming back after shoulder surgery and winning day in and day out pitching his regular turn," Manager Sparky Anderson said. "I quit worrying, though, after he pitched against Detroit in his last Florida outing. He stopped them cold. And just a few days earlier he had been bombed by the same team." There was a day when Nolan's fast ball was measured somewhere between the speed of sound and the speed of light, they say. But the Gary Nolan of the mid 70's is a finesse pitcher, using an assortment of tricky curve balls and pin-point control to master the batters. "Other pitchers can learn a lot from watching Nolan pitch," Anderson said. "He reminds me a lot of Robin Roberts. He gets ahead of the batter quickly. He makes him hit him. He really bears down on the guys who can beat him." Nolan's control, which mystifyingly never deserted him after the long lay-off, came to his rescue often. "The thing about Gary is that batters can't hit his mistakes," Pitching Coach Larry Shepard said. "He's in and out, never down the middle. It's funny how when you've got your back to the wall and no place to go, you become more confident and more sure of yourself. That's what happened to Gary Nolan." Nolan lost his first start of 1975 to San Diego, 3-2. ("He pitched much too good to lose," Sparky said.) Then there were three more starts without a decision. The frustration ended, though, on May 3 when he beat the Braves, 6-1, for his first victory since October of 1972. Nolan was back, and if that wasn't evidence enough, his outing on May 28 was a masterpiece. He beat the Expos 6-0, giving them only two hits. Incredibly, he needed only 87 pitches to complete the game, and 64 of them were strikes.

Dan Driessen

Dan Driessen, the fine young Reds' hitter, captured his first batting championship early in 1976. Driessen batted .331 to lead all players in the Puerto Rican Winter League. He had 55 hits in the short season and also hit nine home runs for his Bayamon club. It was poetic justice for the 24-year-old native of Hilton Head, S. C. Just last winter in the Puerto Rican league Danny suffered a broken arm and started the 1975 campaign on the disabled list. When all was said and done, however, Driessen batted .281 and hit seven home runs filling in for Tony Perez at first base and playing some in the outfield. Two of his round-trippers were game winners. He connected on June 7 against Chicago's Ray Burris and then hit a three-run homer in the bottom of the 11th inning to win a game against San Diego. Driessen is waiting for his chance to play regularly. "I guess you just have to keep thinking your day will come," Danny philosophized. "It's hard sitting on the bench. I want to play. You just can't get your stroke down when you're in and out of the lineup." Manager Sparky Anderson is the first to realize this and wants to get Driessen into the lineup as often as possible.

David Concepcion

One of the most exciting players in major league baseball is certainly shortstop David Concepcion. Defensively, he's a Gold Glove infielder. Offensively, he's a .270 plus hitter. And on the base paths he's a terror. Add that all together and you get a complete player. A tall, rangy native of Venezuela, Concepcion won his second straight Gold Glove in 1975 symbolizing All-Star defensive status. His strong arm enables him to go to the hole, make the stop and still throw out the runner. And his quickness gives him the edge to cut the ball off up the middle and get the runner. David batted .274 in 1975, the first time in three years he was under .280. But he finished with a flurry, hitting safely in his last nine games and 15 of the final 16. He continued that surge into the Championship Series where he batted .455 and hit a key home run in Game 3. He also tied Game 2 of the World Series with a two-out, ninth inning infield hit and he cracked a home run in Game 3. David remained one of baseball's most prolific base stealers. He swiped 33 in 39 attempts and between May 16 and Sept. 13 he was not thrown out, stealing successfully 21 in a row. Concepcion was plagued with an injured hand in August and missed about three weeks. He was struck by Montreal's Dale Murray on Aug. 8 and didn't get back into the lineup until Aug. 24. Concepcion spends his off season in his native Venezuela working with youngsters. "I like to help the kids," David said. "I never had the luck to be around a big leaguer when I was a boy. I help the little leagues. It costs me a lot of money to support a team. Many people want to help but can't. I give them money. I give them time. I give them a big leaguer."

Cesar Geronimo

Centerfielder Cesar Geronimo has few peers when it comes to patrolling the outfield. For the second straight year the 28-year-old native of the Dominican Republic won a Gold Glove. "Many put his arm in the same class with that of the late Roberto Clemente," wrote Earl Lawson of the Cincinnati Post upon Geronimo's selection to the Gold Glove team. "He's brilliant in the field and his long, eight-foot strides give him the ability to cover a lot of ground." Manager Sparky Anderson sees Geronimo another way. "He's absolutely fearless when it comes to going after balls near fences. He doesn't stop or shy away, he goes and gets the ball." There are many stories about Geronimo's rocket-like arm. One involves Cesar Cedeno, and Geronimo tells it this way: "Once I threw out Cesar Cedeno from about 385 feet away from home plate during a game in the Dominican Republic. The ball slipped out of my hand just as I let it go. Instead of the ball going to third base, it went home. It stunned Cedeno and he was out. It stunned me, too. It happens like that with me. Very often I just throw the ball and it gets there, like having radar. I do it, I guess, by instinct." Geronimo couldn't quite match his offensive production of 1974, but he still batted .257, three points more than his career average. And he blasted a couple of home runs during the World Series. When he and David Concepcion hit back to back homers in the fifth inning of Game 3, it was the first time that a National League team had done this in World Series play. Geronimo remembers the situation: "I was looking for a fast ball," he explained, talking about Boston pitcher Rick Wise. "He gave me five in a row. Three of them were balls and I fouled off the first good pitch he gave me. But I hit the next one pretty good." Geronimo also hit a home run in Game 6.

Doug Flynn

In 1971 Doug Flynn was playing slow-pitch softball in southern Kentucky while attending Somerset Community College. It seems impossible, doesn't it, that just four years later he would be on a World Championship team? But that's exactly what happened to the Lexington, Ky., native. "Sometimes I would almost actually want to pinch myself and see if it was really true," Flynn admitted. It was and the reason he was in the major leagues in 1975 was because of his exceptional spring training. He won a spot on the club with the hottest spring bat in Reds' camp in more than 10 years. Playing in 89 games, Flynn batted .268 and filled in ably at shortstop in August when David Concepcion suffered a fractured wrist. He was a big spark in a four-game sweep of the Pirates August 14-17. He had five hits in six at bats, knocked in two runs and played flawlessly in the field. He's certain to long remember May 21, too. In an 11-4 victory over the Mets, Doug hit his first major league home run, a three-run shot off Tom Hall.

Mike Lum

The first native Hawaiian to play in the major leagues is Mike Lum, whom the Reds acquired from the Atlanta Braves during baseball's winter meetings. Capable of playing both first base and the outfield, Lum is an eight-year major league veteran. "The acquisition of Mike Lum solidifies our bench," Reds' President Bob Howsam said when the deal was made that sent Darrel Chaney to the Braves. "Mike is a veteran who knows how to play. He is a fine defensive player and we feel he can swing the bat, too." A regular in 1973 with Atlanta, Lum hit .294 with 16 home runs and 82 RBIs. He had an 18-game hitting streak that season. One of Lum's best days at the plate came against Cincinnati in 1969. He had his only four-for-four game on Oct. 2. Lum also hit three home runs in a game against the Padres in 1970.

Will McEnaney

It was the ninth inning. Three outs to go and the World Championship was Cincinnati's. The verdict rested on the shoulders of the youngest player on the team. Manager Sparky Anderson summoned Will McEnaney to the mound to get the Boston Red Sox out in the ninth inning. "My stomach was churning so much I could hear it growling," McEnaney recalled. "It was my moment of truth. I said, 'here it is, let's go.'" And away he went. Rick Miller was the first to go out, lining to right field. Then came pinch-hitter Bob Montgomery. He hit a grounder to Dave Concepcion at short. The final man was Carl Yastrzemski. Yaz took a mighty cut and lofted a fly to center. That was it as Cesar Geronimo grabbed the ball. By that time McEnaney was in the arms of catcher Johnny Bench and the Championship was in Cincinnati. McEnaney was a major reason why the Reds coasted to their fourth Western Division title in six years. He had a 5-2 record and 2.47 ERA in a magnificent season. He worked in 70 games, second most in the National League and third highest in the majors. He had 15 saves. In one stretch from April 20 through June 10 he was unscored upon. That streak included 26.1 innings and 18 games. Another streak in August and September saw him pitch 12 straight scoreless games. McEnaney did not give up his first home run through 68 innings and 52 appearances, and when he did, it was an inside-the-park job. An easy going Springfield, Ohio, native, McEnaney credits control for his success. "Hitters know I throw strikes so they don't take close pitches. In a tight game, they'll swing at those close pitches and usually my guys make the big plays behind me."

Young relief combo Rawly Eastwick (left) and Will McEnaney are interviewed in the Reds' dressing room after World Series victory.

Rawly Eastwick

Righthander Rawly Eastwick started the 1975 season in the minor leagues, but before it was concluded the 24-year-old New Jersey native had tied for the National League lead in saves with 22 and had become one of the most effective relief pitchers in the major leagues. Eastwick's 22 saves tied St. Louis' Al Hrabosky. But Rawly wasn't finished there. He went ahead and posted a save and a victory in the Championship Series and two wins and a save in the World Series. Eastwick likes his role as a relief pitcher. "Being a reliever is a nice challenge," Rawly explained. "I'm not nervous about coming into a tight situation. Maybe in about three or four years I might like to be a starter. I'm doing the reverse of what used to be the normal progression of a pitcher. He'd start, lose his fast ball and then be put in relief." As the 1975 season progressed, Eastwick got better. After the All-Star game, for instance, he made 34 appearances and allowed only six runs in 47 innings for an ERA of 1.15. He permitted only two runs in his last 27 innings, covering 22 appearances. Eastwick evaluated his success like this: "I come in and I throw strikes. I have the ability to get ahead of the hitter. It's that, plus attitude. I never have a negative thought. I think this radiates to the hitter. He feels it when you believe you are going to get him out." Off the field Eastwick spends most of his time collecting antiques and painting. "I have to let out my competitive urge and I do that through baseball. But I also have an artistic urge. I invent something in my mind and put it on canvas."

Santo Alcala

Righthander Santo Alcala enjoyed his finest professional season in 1975. A native of the Dominican Republic, Alcala was the second ranking pitcher in earned run average last year at Indianapolis where he posted a 2.75 mark. His 13 victories were a career high and led the Indy staff. The tallest player on Reds' roster at six feet, six inches, Alcala made the Reds staff in spring training and won his first four decisions.

Pat Zachry

Tall righthander Pat Zachry was the American Association earned run champion in 1975. The 6-foot-5 promising prospect posted a 2.44 mark and a 10-7 record in 26 games for Indianapolis. Zachry has virtually come out of nowhere to make the Reds staff. He was drafted in the 19th round in June, 1970 and has moved through the farm system. "Hard work has really paid off for Pat," Reds' Director of Player Personnel Chief Bender noted. "He blossomed last year and has really learned how to pitch." Pat won his first three decisions this year.

CINCINNATI'S CHEVY CENTER

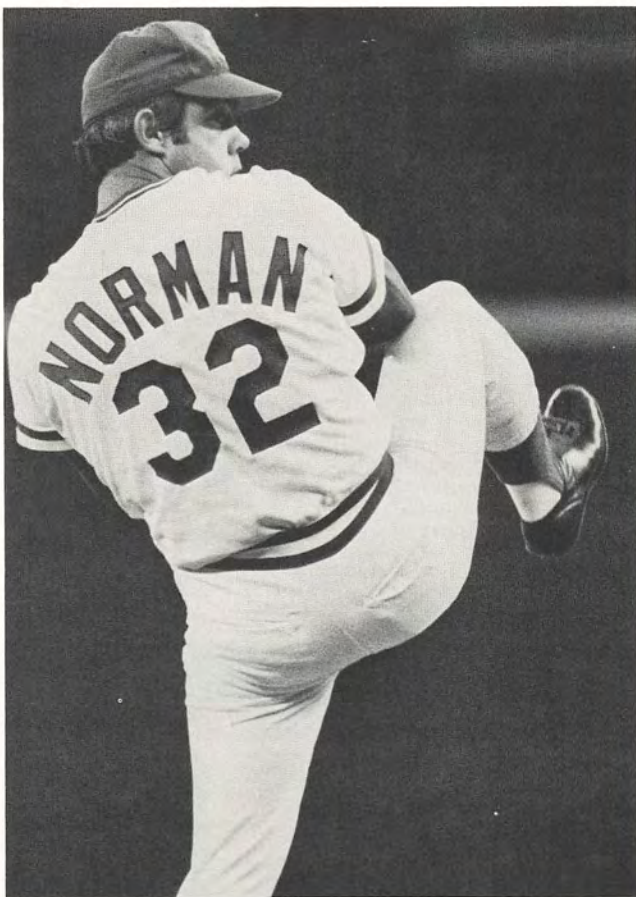

Jack Billingham

Jack Billingham is the type of pitcher who seems to best perform in pressure situations. There is no greater example than the World Series. Appearing in two Classics, Billingham has been outstanding, giving up only one earned run in 23 innings. He did not get a victory in the 1975 Series, but he played a prominent role in Cincinnati's World Championship. "Billingham was fantastic," Pitching Coach Larry Shepard said after game 2. "His role in that victory today was worth his whole last half of the season." In that game Jack pitched 5.2 innings, allowed two runs, but only one was earned. That performance kept the Reds in the game, a victory secured in the top of the ninth, 3-2. Two other shutout innings have, for the most part, gone overlooked, but they were keys in the seventh game triumph. With the Reds down 3-0, he pitched two blanks in relief of Don Gullett as the Reds fought to catch up. "Before I got to Cincinnati, I never knew what the Series really meant," Billingham mused. "I used to enjoy watching it. Now I want to be in it. Playing in the World Series to me is like Christmas." Billingham was a 15-game winner in 1975, giving him 53 triumphs in the past three seasons as one of Cincinnati's and the league's best pitchers. When the Reds won 41 out of 50 games in a streak before the All-Star break, Billingham provided seven consecutive victories to the cause. That winning streak was the longest of his career.

Fred Norman

Flashes of brilliance make lefthander Fred Norman a key pitcher on the Reds' pitching staff. During the final half of the 1975 season, for example, Norman distinguished himself as one of the best pitchers in baseball. From June 21 through the end of the regular season, Norman won nine of 10 games and sported an earned run average of 3.12. The only loss he suffered in that span was when the Reds were shut out. "Freddie has as good a stuff as there is in the league," said Reds' Manager Sparky Anderson. "But he has to throw strikes. When he throws strikes and challenges the hitters, he's awfully tough to beat." Norman, who came to the Reds midway through the 1973 season and won 12 games, is a one-time flame thrower. He still holds the Southern Association record for most strikeouts in a season, 258. But now, his out pitch is a screwball, one that appears to make a left turn when he throws it properly. Norman was 12-4 for the 1975 World Champions and his winning percentage of .750 was third best in the National League among pitchers with 10 or more victories.

Pedro Borbon

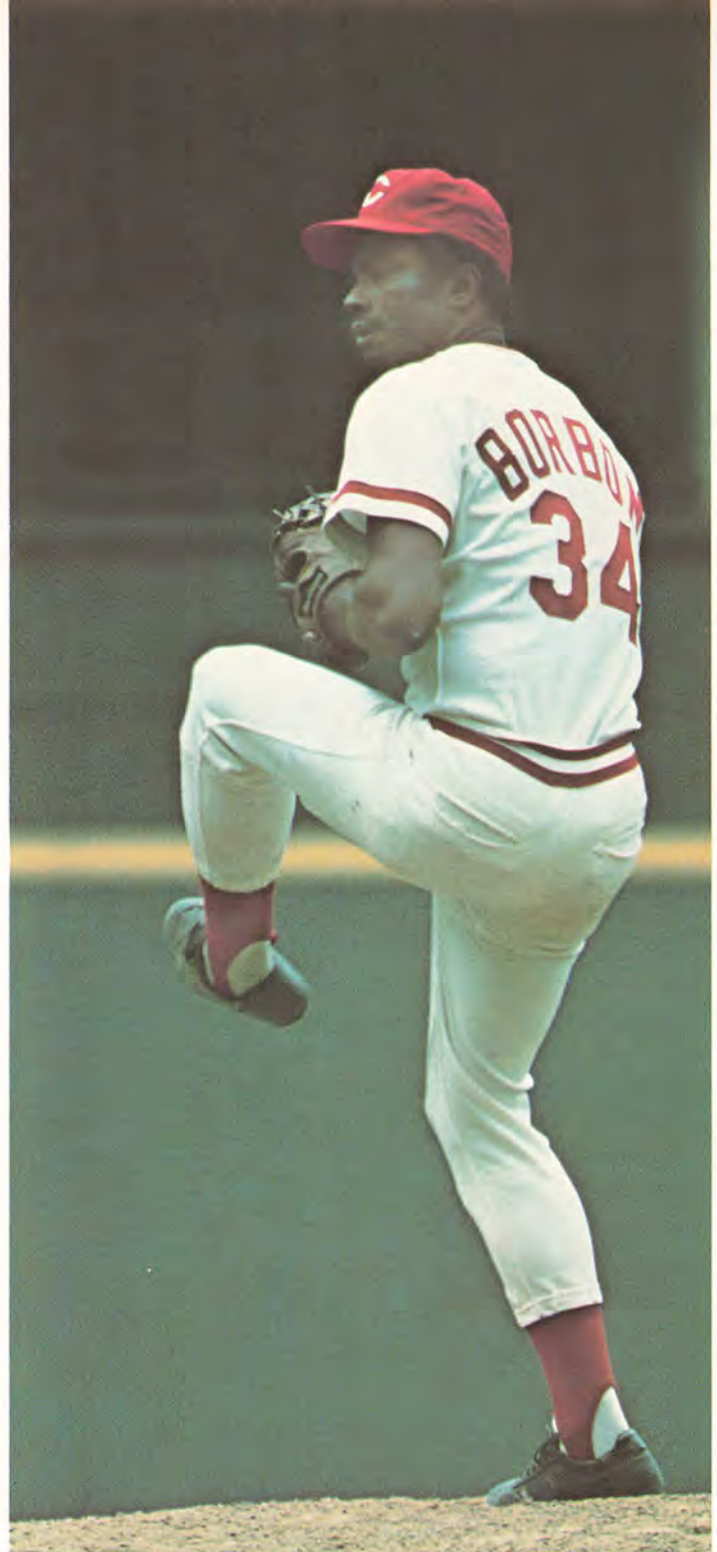

Righthanded reliever Pedro Borbon remained one of baseball's most active pitchers in 1975. The 29-year-old rubber-armed native of the Dominican Republic worked in 67 games and responded with a 9-5 record and 2.95 earned run average, the second best figure in his career. During the past four seasons Borbon has pitched in 282 games, second most in the National League. Only Mike Marshall with 320 appearances has more. Borbon has worked in 67, 73, 80 and 62 games in those four seasons. Pedro was one of the top hurlers in the final weeks of the season. He finished with a rush. In his last 16 appearances he allowed only six earned runs in 33 innings for an ERA of 1.64. With the trading of Clay Carroll to the White Sox, Borbon now takes over senior citizen status in the Reds' bullpen. He has been in the majors full time since 1972, but he had previous experience with California in 1969 and the Reds in both 1970 and 1971. During the past four years with the Reds Pedro has won 38 games while losing only 19.

The World Champions THE 1975 CINCINNATI REDS

It was the ninth inning of the seventh game of the World Series. October 22, 1975. Boston's Fenway Park. The ball left the bat of Carl Yastrzemski and settled into the waiting glove of the Reds' Cesar Geronimo. Reds players converged to celebrate. Bench, Rose, Morgan, Perez, McEnaney, Concepcion and Anderson. The Cincinnati Reds were the World Champions.

A new painting captures that unforgettable moment. A limited edition of 1,000 signed and numbered lithograph art prints has been issued by the Cincinnati Reds. The print is Plate III in the series of Greatest Moments in Reds History. Print size 28" x 22". Complete with colorful, descriptive folder and authentication certificate. A true collector's item. Price, $30.

THE STORY

When the Cincinnati Reds moved their ticket office from 307 Vine to the 580 Bldg., the shift gave birth to a unique little gift shop and newsstand. The expanded quarters of the new location offered the perfect opportunity to give fans a place to find gift items, souvenirs, books and novelties about their favorite team. The shop caters to kids of all ages . . . mom, dad, youngsters, grandparents, everybody.

ART PRINTS

The Reds plunge into the field of art is an example of what 580 is all about . . . distinctive, adult merchandise. The club commissioned Cincinnati artist Clint Orlemann to do a series of paintings featuring "Greatest Moments in Reds History." One is The Home Run featuring Johnny Bench. Another is Double No-Hitter, commemorating Johnny VanderMeer's historic feat. The newest is a salute to The World Champions. Art critics have been highly complimentary of Mr. Orlemann's approach. Prints have been issued in limited editions of 1000, all signed and numbered by the artist. Price is $30. Reds art prints add the perfect touch of baseball to family rooms, dens, offices or game rooms. These prints, as well as others, are on display and available at the gift shop.

FUN THINGS

The gift shop is a good time. The theme is fun . . . fun things to give as gifts, like a Reds miniature beer pail. The 580 shopkeeper is always on the lookout for unique items that fans won't find anywhere else. "Exclusive" is the name of the game at the Reds official gift shop.

Sears TED WILLIAMS

Chairman of our Sports Advisory Staff

When Ted Williams signed with Sears as a consultant, Sears told him, "Work closely with our merchandise buyers. Help develop the most professional sports equipment possible. Make improvements. And give the items you recommend a real workout."

Before any piece of Sears sports equipment can earn the Ted Williams name, it must be personally approved by a member of his Sports Advisory Staff. It must be thoroughly proved by the Sears laboratory. And it must be given a final okay by Ted himself.

Nixon Newest Reds Coaching Staff Member

Cincinnati native Russ Nixon is the first newcomer to the Reds' coaching staff since Manager Sparky Anderson took over in 1970. Nixon, an American League catcher during the 60's, replaces Alex Grammas who was named manager of the Milwaukee Brewers. Nixon joins a veteran coaching staff of George Scherger, Larry Shepard and Ted Kluszewski. Scherger, Anderson's first professional manager when he broke in with the Dodgers in 1953 at Santa Barbara, moves to third base this year while Nixon becomes the new first base coach. Shepard is the pitching coach and during his tenure with the Reds Cincinnati pitching has been among the best in the major leagues. The hitting instructor is Kluszewski. A Cincinnati star as a player, Klu has carried on with his batting tips and the Reds are consistently among the top two or three hitting teams in the major leagues.

World Championship Caps Dream For Reds' President

Cincinnati's first World Championship in 35 years capped a dream that started in 1967 when Bob Howsam was named General Manager of the Cincinnati Reds.

"The Championship is the ultimate goal of anyone in baseball," Howsam said. "It is the end result of a whole lot of work for a whole lot of people both on the field and in the front office."

Howsam came to the Reds on Jan. 22, 1967, and since then the Cincinnati organization has become one of the most prominent, both on the field and in the front office. The Reds have become one of baseball's superpowers with one World Championship, three National League pennants, and four division championships.

And at the gate the Reds have been quite successful, too. In each of the last three seasons Cincinnati has attracted more than two million fans, paid, and only the Los Angeles Dodgers and New York Mets have drawn more fans than the Reds during the 70's.

Howsam has been handsomely rewarded for the Reds' success. He was elected President and Chief Executive Officer of the Reds on March 12, 1973 and just prior to last year's World Series he signed a five-year contract to continue as leader of the Big Red Machine.

Presentation of the World Championship Trophy was made to the Reds by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn (third from left) during ceremonies at Fountain Square. Accepting for the Reds were Chairman of the Board Louis Nippert, Reds' President Bob Howsam and Manager Sparky Anderson.

Howsam's baseball background started in Denver when his family purchased the Denver franchise in 1948. It was there that he made his first mark on the game. He drew more than 463,000 fans in one season and set a 10-year minor league attendance mark that still stands. In the promotional vein, Howsam established all kinds of programs for the young people, such as Straight A tickets. Today this program is one of the Reds' most successful promotions.

Twice at Denver, Howsam was honored as Executive of the Year. He added a third trophy in Cincinnati when he was voted the major league Executive of the Year in 1973, joining such greats as Branch Rickey and George Weiss as three time Executive of the Year winners.

One of the founders of the American Football League, Howsam left baseball in the late fifties and later headed an investment company. But the lure of the National Pastime was always there and one call from Branch Rickey was all it took for Howsam to resume his baseball career.

That was in 1964 when he was named General Manager of the St. Louis Cardinals in August. Howsam's move to the major leagues coincided with a strong late-season drive that gave the Cardinals the pennant and an eventual World Championship over the Yankees.

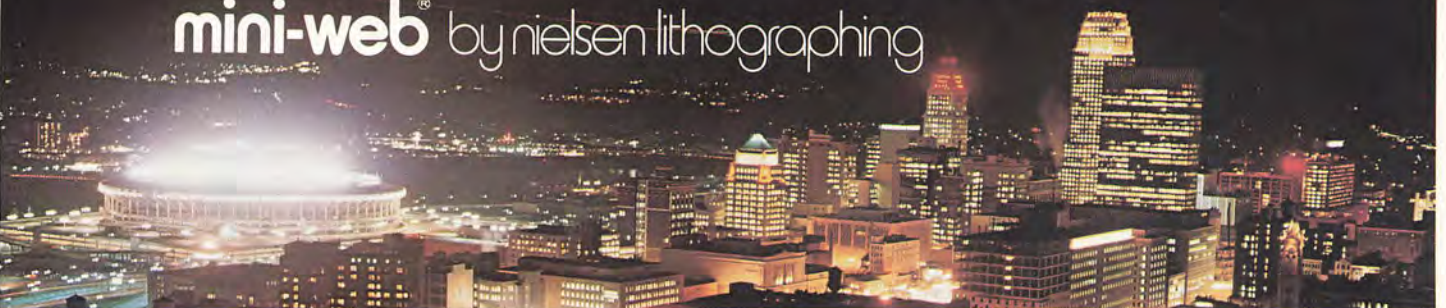

He remained with the Cardinals until 1967 when a group of civic minded businessmen purchased the Cincinnati franchise and asked Howsam to be its General Manager. That Cardinal team he helped put together went on to win a World Series in 1967 and a pennant in 1968.

Howsam is considered one of baseball's shrewdest traders. The acquisition of Joe Morgan, Jack Billingham, Cesar Geronimo and Ed Armbrister from Houston stands out as one of baseball's best deals. And when he was with the Cardinals he acquired both Orlando Cepeda and Roger Maris who played key roles in St. Louis' two National League winners in 1967-68.

The Reds' President, who was born Feb. 28, 1918, is married to the former Janet Johnson. They have two sons, Robert, Jr., and Edwin. Bob and his wife Ginny live in New York. Edwin and his wife Nancy and children Erik and Andrea Leigh live in Phoenix where Edwin is the Reds' scouting supervisor in Arizona and New Mexico.

Brenneman, Nux Call The Action On Radio Network

The man who is well known for "And This One Belongs To the Reds" and "The Ole Lefthander Rounding Third and Heading For Home" return for their third year together in the Reds radio booth.

Marty Brenneman and Joe Nuxhall describe all the action this year on the Reds radio network which is one of the largest in the major leagues.

Brenneman, a native of Norfolk, Va., came to the Reds from the Tidewater Tides of the International League.

An instant hit with Reds' fans, Brenneman was selected to call the play-by-play for the National League Championship Series in 1974 and in 1975 was on the World Series broadcasting team both on radio and television.

He closes each Cincinnati victory with "And This One Belongs to the Reds."

Marty was named Ohio's Sportscaster of the Year in 1975 and will be honored by the National Sportscasters and Sportswriters Association.

Brenneman is a graduate of the University of North Carolina and he also attended Randolph Macon College. He began his sports work on radio in Salisbury, N. C.

Marty and his wife Brenda have two children.

Joe Nuxhall, the youngest player ever to play in a major league baseball game, is back for his ninth season as the Reds' color commentator. A 15-year major league veteran, Nuxhall offers valuable insight into the game as each broadcast progresses.

A native of Hamilton, Nuxhall was only 15 years old when he made his big league debut with the Reds in June of 1944.

Joe hosts the pre-game Turfside show and the post-game Star of the Game. Brenneman interviews Manager Sparky Anderson before each game on the Main Spark and presents a Scores and Comments show after each contest.

Reds broadcasts are heard in more than 90 markets and the seven-state network encompasses more than 100 stations.

Reds Radio Network

For the sixth consecutive year, the Broadcast Department of the Cincinnati Reds, Inc., is handling all arrangements for radio play-by-play broadcasts. This includes the sale of radio time during the games and for pre-game and post-game broadcasts on WLW Radio, the 50,000-watt flagship station in Cincinnati and also for the in-game network sponsors. Jim Winters is Director of the Broadcast Department for the Reds and is also responsible for administration and production of each radio broadcast.

All regular season and pre-season games are carried on the Cincinnati Reds Radio Network, comprised of more than 120 stations in 100 markets. WHIO Radio, Dayton, heads a list of network affiliates in seven states. The Stroh Brewery Co. is the prime sponsor on WLW and the network. Marathon Oil is a co-sponsor on WLW and the network. Conwood Tobacco Co., and Kings Island are participating sponsors on the network. The First National Bank of Cincinnati, Frisch's Restaurants and Pepsi Cola are co-sponsors on WLW. Riverside Ford is a participating co-sponsor on WLW.

Ken Coleman

Bill Brown

Coleman, Brown On Reds' TV

Ken Coleman, back for his second year, and newcomer Bill Brown call the play-by-play action on the Reds' television network.

Coleman described the action for the Cleveland Indians and Boston Red Sox before joining flagship station WLWT in 1975.

A 30-year sports broadcasting veteran, Coleman has been in the sports booth since 1947 when he broke in covering basketball in Vermont.

A native of Hartford, Conn., Coleman was the Indians' telecaster for 10 seasons and then for nine more years he was the television sportscaster for the Red Sox.

He was named Outstanding Sports Announcer in Ohio six consecutive years while living in Cleveland and he has received 12 awards for broadcasting excellence from the American Federation of Radio and Television Artists.

His civic interests are wide and varied. He is General Chairman of the "Jimmy Fund" in Boston where he makes his home. The Jimmy Fund is a children's cancer research foundation.

Coleman is also the author of "So You Want To Be a Sportscaster" published in 1973. He and his wife Ellen are the parents of five children.

Bill Brown replaces Woody Woodward as the color commentator.

Brown is a well-known Cincinnati sportscaster and his Redscene prime time specials presented last year prior to Reds games were a big hit with the fans.

A native of Sedalia, Mo., Brown came to WLWT from Saigon where he was assigned as a broadcast specialist 4th Class in the Army.

Reds TV Network

Multimedia of Ohio, Inc., holds the television rights to Reds games through the 1979 season. Flagship station for the five-state network is WLWT, Channel 5, Cincinnati. Telecasters are Ken Coleman and Bill Brown.

Reds Of The Future

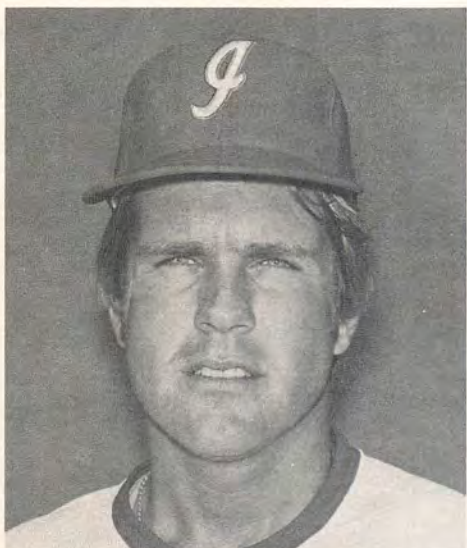

Larry Payne

Larry Payne, a righthanded pitcher, was Cincinnati's No. 1 draft choice in June of 1972. He has worked his way through the Cincinnati farm system to his present spot at Indianapolis after starting in the Rookie League his first season. Payne spent the entire 1975 campaign with Indianapolis, posting a 9-13 record with a fine 3.15 earned run average. Payne, who stands 6-feet tall, is a native of Huntsville, Texas.

Dave Revering, a lefthanded hitting first baseman, is one of the strongest hitters in the Reds' organization. The No. 7 draft selection in June of 1971, Revering hit 21 home runs and knocked in 71 runs last year with Indianapolis. In his first five minor league seasons in the Reds' farm system, Revering hit 71 home runs. Revering, who is 6-foot-4, is a native of Roseville, Calif.

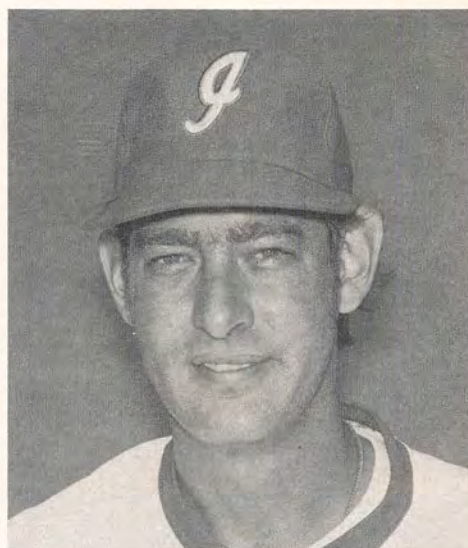

Dave Revering

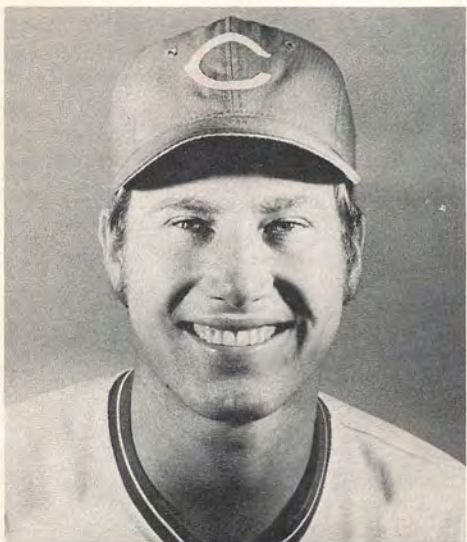

Jeff Sovern

Jeff Sovern, a righthanded hitting catcher, came to the Reds during the winter from the Chicago White Sox in the deal that sent the contract of Clay Carroll to Chicago. Drafted in 1973 by the White Sox, Sovern spent the 1975 season at Denver in the American Association where he batted .293 with 17 home runs. Sovern is a native of Battle Creek, Mich.

Mike Thompson, a righthanded pitcher, came to the Cincinnati organization during spring training this year in the deal that sent Terry Crowley to the Atlanta Braves. Thompson has had past major league experience with Texas, Atlanta and St. Louis. He was originally signed by the Washington Senators and pitched a one-hitter in his first major league start. He is a native of Denver, Colo.

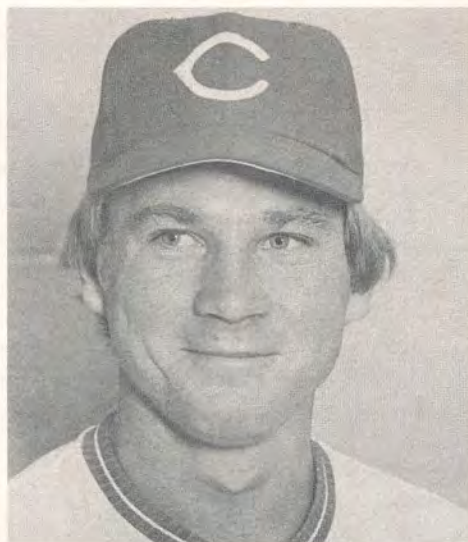

Mike Thompson

Ray Knight

Ray Knight, a righthanded hitting third baseman, is in his sixth year of baseball after being drafted in the 10th round in 1970. He has progressed through the Reds' farm system to Indianapolis where he spent the last two seasons. He was the No. 2 hitter on the club last year with a .272 average, raising his average some 45 points over the previous year.

Don Werner, a righthanded hitting catcher, saw his first major league activity last September when he was added to the major league roster. Werner was Cincinnati's No. 5 draft pick in 1971 and has moved from the Rookie League to Class AAA. Last year he made the jump from Tampa (Class A) to Indianapolis. This year he was optioned to Richmond of the International League to gain playing experience.
